Famous Feats of Strength.

Among the Greeks the successful arhiete was erowned with laurels and loaded down with weal hand honors. When Egenetus, in the blocky see; n i Olympial, triumplant in games, entered Agrigentum, his native home, he was attended by an ere rt of 300 obsticts, each drawn by two white horses, and followed by the populies, cheering and waving hanners. Milo sx times wen the palm at both the O'ympic and Pathian games. He is sell to have mo a mile with a four year old ex upon his shoulders, and afterward killed the animal with a blow of his fist, and ate the entire core es in one day ! So great was his muscalar power that he would sometimes bind a cord round his head and break it by the anching and pressure of the veins. An ordinary meal for Mile was twenty pounds of ment, as much bread, and fifteen pints of wine. Pelydamus, of Thessalia, was of prodigions strength and colossal beight, and, it is said, alone and without weapons, bitled an enormous and enraged lion. One day lit is so recorded he seized a buil by one of its bind feet, and the sound escaped only by leaving the hoof in the gras) of the athlete. The Roman Emperer Maximious was upwerd of eight feet in height, and, like Milo, of Crotone, could quetz) to powder the hardest stone with his flogers and break the leg or jaw of a horse by a kick. His wife's bree let served him as a rug, and his every day meal was six'y pounds of meat and ac amphora of wine. While a prisoner in Germany, Richard I. accepted an invitation to a bexing mustch with We invite the attention of dealers and consumers to our large stock of CAREFULLY PREPARED COAL of the following varieties:

He recived the first blow, earried both the man and his shell to a great distance, and deposited them on the wall of a churchyard. Owing to domestic troubles, he committed suicide in the prime of life. The famous Scinderberg, King of Albania, who was born in 1414, was a man of great statute, and his feats in sword exercise have never been equaled. On one occasion, with a scimitar, he struck his antagonist such a terrible blow that its tremendous force cleaved him to the wajst. He is said to have often eleven in two men who were clad in armor from head to foot. On one occasion the brother and nephew of a certain Ballaban, who had been convicted of crucities toward the Albanians, were brought to him, bound together. Transported with rage, he cur them in two with one stroke of his weapon. Maurice, Count of Saxony, the hero of Fontency, inherited the physical vigor of his father, and was especially noted for the suprising musucular power, or "grip," of his hands. On one occasion, needing a corkscrew, he twist ed a long iron nail round into the required shape with his fingers, and with this extemporized implement opened a half dezen bettles of wine. Another time, when stopping at a vil loge blacksmith shop to have his horse shod, he picked up a number of new horseshoes, and with his hands snapped them in two as readily as if made of glass, much to the surprise and disgust of the smith. It history is to be believed, Pasylius, of Cretona, could jump a distarca of fitty six feet. The exercise was practiced at the Oympic games and formed part of the course of the Pentathion. Strutt, an English authority en gemes and amusements, speaks of a Yorkish jumper named Ireland, whose powers were something marvelous. He was six feet high, and at the age of eighteen leaped, without the aid of a spring board, over nine horses ranged side by side. He cleared a cord extended four teen feet from the ground with a bound, crushed with his foot a bladder suspended at a height of sixteen feet, and on another occasion lightly c'esred a large wagon covered with an awaing. Col. Ironside, who fixed in India early in this century, relates that he met in his travils an old white haired man who with one leap sprang over the back of an enormous elembant flanked by six camels of the largest breed.
